PHOTOGRAPHS

- [208-001] Company A, 2nd Virginia Regiment, US Volunteer Army, posed in front of three houses [probably in Woodstock, Va] during Spanish-American War. Certain persons were at one time identified, but identification has been lost, circa 1898.
- [208-002] Company A, 2nd Virginia Regiment, US Volunteer Army, posed in front of three houses [probably in Woodstock, VA] during Spanish-American War. Date uncertain. Certain persons were at one time identified, but identification has been lost. Cropped version of photograph as part of informational brochure, circa 1898.
- [208-004] Round Hill (Shenandoah County, VA) Civil War site. Notation, "Pond in foreground used by Federal soldiers as a laundry". South of Strasburg, VA. View is approximately from east of the hill, looking west. Valley Pike (or railroad?) may be in the mid-ground behind pond, circa 1920.
- [208-005] Confederate Army veterans at a reunion, posed on front steps of a house in Woodstock, VA, with women and children, circa 1920.
- [208-006] Members of a Confederate Army regiment in uniform assembled in front of a brick building. No persons identified, circa 1861.
- [208-007] Older man in Confederate Army uniform, presumably a CSA veteran. Unidentified, circa 1910.
- [208-015] Civil War. Monument to the 128th New York State Volunteer Infantry, on Cedar Creek battlefield on Valley Pike (Route 11) between Middletown and Strasburg, VA. Date uncertain, before cleaning and restoration. The 128th New York infantry comprised Col. Daniel McCauley's brigade of Brig. Gen. Cuvier Groves, 2nd Division of Brig. Gen. Wm. Emerys XIX Corps, circa 1980s.

- [208-045] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Opequon Creek and Winchester Pike. Print has a distinctly mauve tone. "No. 1. Where Sheridan's army crossed Opequon Creek, Va., Sept. 19, 1864: steel bridge built 1907; view of Winchester Berryville pike looking west towards Wood's Mill and Winchester, taken from the spring June 29, 1908."
- [208-046] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Winchester Pike looking east from battlefield. "No. 2. Straight view of about 800 yards of the pike looking easterly towards Opequon Creek from the top of the divide about midway to the enemy's line of battle in the ravine, from where Sheridan formed the line of battle. The narrow belt of timber has been cut away behind which we fought," 1908.
- [208-047] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Sheridan's left center, battlefield. "No. 3. Sheridan's Sept. 19, 1864, Winchester, Va. battlefield looking southerly from the hill just north of the pike running along the east side of the ravine occupied by the enemy's infantry. The sunk pike borders the edge of the wood from left to right. The foreground was assaulted over by the Tenth Vermont. The distant open field through the gap in the trees was charged over by the Vermont Brigade and Second Division, Sixth Corps," 1908.
- [208-048] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Sheridan's right center, battlefield. "No. 4. Sheridan's Winchester, Va. battlefield looking northerly from near the pike showing the height of the divide running east and west : also the infantry and artillery swept flat ground in front of the Tenth Vermont and Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Corps : also the open distant ground over which the Nineteenth Corps charged with virtually no enemy's infantry in its front, but a little artillery in its distant front. Its unbroken advance over the open distant field was a beautiful sight. Numbers 3 and 4 illustrations show the ground over which our entire infantry line of battle swept in the first assault. The Nineteenth Corps was beyond the first timber on the ravine running centrally across the picture, its left resting about on the extreme right of the ravine. Russell assaulted largely over the foreground in No. 4," 1908.
- [208-049] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Sheridan's battlefield looking northwest. "No. 5. Sheridan's Sept. 19, 1864, Winchester, Va. battlefield looking westerly showing the source of the ravine in which was the enemy's infantry in front of the right of the Tenth Vermont and the Second Brigade., Third Division, Sixth Corps. The enemy's artillery was on the further side of the smooth mid-ground to the left beyond the corn-field and ravine : also on the left mid-ground not shown in the illustration. It was opposite the barn, pool and trees on the right where the Second Brigade collapsed but 200 yards before reaching where they now are. Who wonders! Still the Tenth Vermont didn't collapse, nor did it when it advanced over the ground where the corn field now is in the illustration. We preferred death instead, many of whom accepted it, including Gen. Russell, Majors Dillingham, Vredenburg, and Lieut. Hill. Russell's command assaulted over the ground where the barn, pool and trees now are," 1908.

- [208-054] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Ravine occupied by enemy infantry in front of Third Division, VI Corps. "No. 6. View of the ravine occupied by the enemy's infantry, looking north from the pike where it crosses the ravine. Maj. Abbott was twice wounded at the top of the hill looking under the long limb of the first tree where the horizon shows so plainly. On the brow of the hill was a line of rebel rail breast-works. The ravine was alive with the enemy, to its head confronted by the Third Division, Sixth Corps. The enemy's artillery stationed on higher ground in rear of the infantry, firing over it together with its rapid firing literally swept, singed and scalped, the flat ground over which we charged: it was practically untenable. The continuation of this ravine south is shown in No. 7 illustration," 1908.
- [208-055] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Ravine in front of Third Division, VI Corps, unoccupied. "No. 7. Ravine looking southerly from where the pike crosses it in front of most of the First Brigade, Third Division, and the right of the Second Division, Sixth Corps, mentioned by Col. A.F. Walker. Only about a regiment of the enemy was here which crossed the pike in the front of the right of the Tenth Vermont, early," 1908.
- [208-056] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Ravine from head occupied by enemy in front of Third Division, VI Corps. Major Abbott standing in field. "No. 8. View from near the head of the ravine occupied by the enemy's infantry, looking southerly towards the pike running along he edge of the distant forest. This is now (1908) fine farm: its building on the left and those dimly seen in the edge of the distant wood along which the sunken pike runs have been built since the Civil War. Observe the perfect cover next to the pike for the enemy : it was here the Tenth Vermont assaulted, and the Second Brigade, this side as far north as the figure (Maj. Abbott), while the enemy's infantry behind rail breast-works and its artillery several hundred yards in rear to the right on higher ground swept the flat open field over which we charged in their front. It was almost a forlorn hope. Who would wish to criticize troops unfairly under such circumstances? The divide running east and west was about a hundred yards to Maj. Abbott's right. On its opposite or north side the Nineteenth Corps charged," 1908.
- [208-057] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Winchester Pike looking west from battlefield. "No. 9. Observe the cut through the divide for the road," 1908.
- [208-058] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. Taylor Hotel (125 North Loudoun Street). "No. 10. Taylor Hotel, Winchester, Va., used during the Civil War by the Union and Confederate armies as Headquarters and Hospital, 1861-1865. Said to have sheltered 1,300 wounded of both armies after Sheridan's battle of Winchester, Sept. 19, 1864 : it was here that Lieut. D.G. Hill, Tenth Vermont Volunteer Infantry, died. It is now vacant," 1908.
- [208-059] Scenes connected with Third Battle of Winchester. 227 South Loudoun Street, Winchester, VA. Exterior of Cannon Ball House showing sign. Home demolished in 1959. "No. 11.
